

How do you test lithium-ion batteries for electric vehicles?

The corrosion resistance of lithium-ion batteries for electric vehicles is tested using salt spray tests. Salt, condensation and changing temperatures - the climate change corrosion test chamber tests lithium-ion batteries under the harshest conditions.

Do lithium-ion batteries meet the automotive test standard LV 124?

To meet the automotive test standard LV 124, the lithium-ion batteries have to pass a variety of temperature tests. ClimeEvent climatic test chambers were modified according to customer specifications for the diverse climatic tests according to automotive test standard LV 124.

Do high-voltage batteries need to be tested in cold water?

High-voltage batteries for electric vehicles must be tested for their functionality when suddenly immersed in cold water. Heat, cold, humidity, wind and dust: in the world's largest battery test center, energy storage devices undergo a wide variety of environmental simulations.
