The advantages of that approach are that they avoid the cost of a battery, they can use a simple grid-tie-inverter (whereas being able to use a battery as backup needs a more complex and expensive multi-directional inverter, a solar charge controller, a battery management system etc.), and selling the energy directly is more efficient than charging a battery and using the energy ...

The development of ironclad warships by Italy and France posed a direct threat, prompting the British to bolster Malta's defenses. Italy's construction of the Duilio and Dandolo warships, each equipped with 100-ton guns in the 1870s, led to the deployment of similar heavy artillery across Malta's landscape, replacing outdated knights-era defenses.
